

FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE

1707 TO 1815

ACT OF UNION TO BATTLE OF WATERLOO

ERA SUMMARY – FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE

When the English Parliament passed the Act of Settlement in 1701, to bypass all members of the Stuart family, and pass the throne on to the Hanoverians, the solidified Parliament's control over the monarchy. When George I, ascended to the throne on the death of Queen Anne, he bypassed many members of the royal family, and took his position solely at the discretion of parliament. His main qualifications were 1) he was Protestant rather than Catholic, and 2) he did not speak English and had no knowledge of political affairs. This, however, was an asset as far as Parliament was concerned, since he was entirely under their control. Since George I was unable to run his own cabinet meetings, his leading minister Robert Walpole became the first Prime Minister of England, and much of the crown's authority transferred to this position. Walpole served under George I, and George II, and his ministry was generally peaceful but not notable for reform or expansion of territory.

Jacobite Rebellions—Although George I had the support of Parliament, there were still many Stuart supporters, especially in Ireland and Scotland. James III, the Old Pretender, led a rebellion in 1715, and his son James IV, Young Pretender, led a second in 1745. Both uprisings, known as Jacobite Rebellions, failed miserably, but the story of Young Pretender, also known as Bonnie Prince Charlie, involved a great deal of romance and dash. There were no further challenges to the Hanoverian rule.

'GENTLEMEN', HE CRIED, DRAWING HIS SWORD. 'I HAVE THROWN AWAY THE SCABBARD.'

William Pitt and the Seven Years War—During the first half of the 18th century, both France and England had been expanding their settlements in North America, and developing their trade in the far east. In both locations, the long term interests of France and England were at odds, and by mid-century, had reached a crisis point. At this time, one of the greatest statesmen in British History appeared on the scene, William Pitt, also known as the Earl of Chatham. He took charge of Britain's foreign affairs at a critical time, reformed its military, and during the course of the Seven Year's War (known as the French Indian Wars in the U.S.), won several enormously important victories with long-lasting consequences for the British Empire.

The victory of General Wolfe at the Battle of Quebec drove France out of North America; Clive's victory at Plassey won the Indian State of Bengal for Britain; and the Battle of Quiberon Bay, under Lord Edward Hawke destroyed French naval power.

The Seven Years' War made Britain the dominant European power in North America and India as well, and gave her uncontested mastery of the Seas. Yet this was only the foundation of her eventual empire, and the struggle against France would not be finally resolved for another half century. For the next fifty years, her politics were dominated by wars and revolutions on four continents, and the beginnings of an industrial revolution at home. In spite of these struggles, Britain grew and thrived during this time, her population, commerce, and agricultural production, all nearly doubling. The reign of George III lasted nearly sixty years, and, although he attempted, much more than his Hanoverian predecessors, to hold power in his own hands, his misguided policies ended up costing Britain her most valuable colonies in North America. This crisis occurred in the first twenty years of his reign, and for much of his succeeding reign, the real power lay with his Prime Minister, William Pitt, whose father had opposed the War against the colonies, and urged Britain to make peace with Americans. Pitt the Younger was almost as effective a statesman as his father, and favored many important reforms to the British government, but could not implement them until the close of the Napoleonic Wars, which he did not live to see.

French Revolution and Napoleonic Wars—The French Revolution, which occurred in 1789 plunged Britain into a complicated series of wars with France, lasting almost a quarter century. At first many people within Britain, sympathized with the rebels, but when the true nature of the revolution became apparent, Britain joined an alliance with most other European powers to oppose the Revolutionary Government. During the first series of battles, lasting from 1793 to 1802, Britain provided arms and support to various coalitions of European powers who fought against France, and won many important naval victories. It was during these French Revolutionary Wars that Horatio Nelson, the greatest naval hero in Britain's history, proved his mettle at the Battles of St. Vincent, Nile, and Copenhagen. In spite of these victories, France was generally victorious in its wars with the European governments, and Napoleon had risen to power. Soon after he declared himself emperor, the European powers agreed to recognize him and enjoyed a short period of peace before he began the conquest of continental Europe, known as the Napoleonic Wars.

NELSON AT THE BATTLE OF COPENHAGEN

For many years Britain was the only check on Napoleon's power, and if he had been able to land an army on her shores, he believed his superior army would prevail against her. However, the Battle of Trafalgar, fought in 1805, destroyed France's naval power, assuring that Britain would remain free from invasion. Though victorious at sea, Britain was unable to stop Napoleon's domination of the continent, and within a year of Trafalgar, most of Western Europe was under his control. Portugal, and to some extent Spain however, was still actively resisting the French powers, so the Duke of Wellington, the greatest general within Britain, rose an army and fought Napoleon's forces in the Peninsular War, on the Iberian Peninsula. This front, which was active from 1808 to 1813, was Britain's main campaign on the continent, but it encouraged smuggling, provided financial support to rebels, and in other ways helped to undermine Napoleon's government, especially following his disastrous campaign in Russia. It was not until the Battle of Waterloo however, in 1814 that Napoleon's power was permanently broken, and France remained in an unsettled condition for years afterward.

Exploration and Colonization—The last half of the 18th century was also a period during which Britain's colonial holdings increased, and much exploration done. Captain Cook, the greatest navigator of his age, not only discovered Australia and New Zealand for Britain, in the 1770's but also much improved the British navy by instituting standards of nutrition and cleanliness aboard ships which greatly reduced the incidence of scurvy and other disease. His explorations of the polar areas, and south sea islands, also much improved geographical knowledge of the time. Other explorers of this age included Mungo Park, who traced the mouth of the Niger, George Vancouver, who claimed Western Canada for Britain, and Alexander Mackenzie, who explored the far regions of Northwest Canada for the Hudson Bay Company, and James Bruce, who discovered the legendary source of the Blue Nile in Abyssinia (modern Ethiopia).

The loss of the American colonies in 1783 had the effect of accelerating the settlement of Canada and Australia. In the Americas, Tory sympathizers left the new republic in droves, and settled in upper Canada (now Ontario), and Australia was originally settled as a penal colony, since British felons could no longer be sent to the American colonies. British citizens also began settling in South Africa, which had been won from Holland in 1795 during the French Revolutionary Wars. The British presence in India increased also during this period, still under the auspices of the British East India Company, under the Governorship of Warren Hastings. Unlike Britain's colonies in the west however, India was already heavily populated, and English outposts functioned more as trading centers than expanding settlements. The British also held numerous Island colonies in the West Indies, and continued to import slaves from Africa to work on cotton, sugar, and tobacco plantations there, until the slave trade was outlawed in 1807. Slavery was finally made illegal in all British colonies in 1833.

British Literature, Science, Industry, Economics and Culture—The 18th century was a very fertile one for English Literature. There emerged several notable English writers, including Alexander Pope, Jonathan Swift of Gulliver's Travels fame, and Samuel Johnson, author of the first Dictionary of the English Language. Literary greats of the revolutionary era included the Robert Burns the Poet, Sir Walter Scott, the greatest of Scottish novelists, Edmund Burke, the political philosopher, who was known to be very sympathetic to the American Revolution but was one of the first to condemn the French Revolution; and Blackstone, the famous jurist and author of Commentaries on the Laws of England, the authoritative work on English Common Law.

The British writer of greatest long term importance however, was probably Adam Smith, who published The Wealth of Nations in 1776. He advocated the novel idea of free trade and low tariffs at time when much of government revenues, monopolies, and money making schemes were tied up with tariffs and other import encumbrances. Although his ideas took several generations to take full effect, they eventually became the foundation of modern capitalism. The economic ideas of Adam Smith, combined with some of the critical inventions of the era, including James Watt's Steam Engine, Hargreaves' spinning Jenny, Crompton's Mule, and George Stephenson's locomotive, eventually set the stage for an industrial revolution in England which had world-wide repercussions and changed the nature of international commerce.

CHARACTERS – FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE

MONARCHS/STATESMEN

George I	1660–1727	First Hanoverian Monarch of Britain. Entrusted government to Robert Walpole
George II	1683–1760	Second Hanoverian Monarch of Britain.
George III	1738–1820	Monarch whose long reign encompassed Revolutionary, and Napoleonic Wars.
Old Pretender	1688–1766	Son of James II, led Jacobites in a bid to restore Stuarts to the throne of England.
Young Pretender	1720–1788	Grandson of James II, led Jacobites in bid to restore Stuarts to the throne of England.
Robert Walpole	1676–1745	First Prime Minister of Britain. Ran cabinet meetings for George I
William Pitt	1708–1778	Statesman who masterminded the rise of the British Empire during the critical 18th century.
William Pitt	1759–1806	Son of the Earl of Chatham, served between American Revolution and Napoleonic Wars.
Edmund Burke	1730–1797	Very influential Political Philosopher, whose works are a basis of constitutional law

MILITARY

General Wolfe	1727–1759	Defeated the French at the Battle of Quebec , giving Canada to Britain. Died during battle.
Lord Anson	1697–1762	British naval hero who circumnavigated the globe and wrote a diary about his journey.
Lord Edward Hawke	1705–1781	Hero of the naval Battle of Quiberon during the Seven Years War.
General Braddock	1695–1755	Led a disastrous campaign to Fort Duquesne (Ohio) during the French and Indian Wars.
General Burgoyne	1723–1792	British leader who surrendered with 6000 men to American forces at Saratoga.
General Cornwallis	1738–1805	British leader defeated at Yorktown in Revolutionary War. Later served as governor in India.
Horatio Nelson	1758–1805	Great Naval hero of his age; victor at the Battle of the Nile , Copenhagen , and Trafalgar .
Duke of Wellington	1769–1852	Napoleonic war general who fought in Spain and Portugal. Defeated Napoleon at Waterloo.
John Moore	1761–1809	Napoleonic War hero who died at the Battle of Coruna .

ARTS/LITERATURE

Adam Smith	1723–1790	Leading theorist of modern capitalism. Wrote The Wealth of Nations .
Alexander Pope	1688–1744	Eminent poet and Satirist of the enlightenment era. Wrote Essay on Criticism .
John Wesley	1703–1774	Founder of the evangelical Methodist movement in England. Social reformer.
Jonathan Swift	1667–1745	Poet, essayist, and satirist. Best known as author of Gulliver's Travels .
Samuel Johnson	1709–1784	Eminent literary figure in England. Wrote the first British Dictionary.
Angelica Kaufmann	1741–1807	Eminent European Painter, who lived many years in England.

HEROINES

Flora MacDonald	1722–1790	Heroine who help Bonnie Prince Charles escape from Scotland.
Hannah More	1745–1833	Dedicated her life to helping the poor of England.
Elizabeth Fry	1780–1845	Quaker and prison reformer. Fought for better conditions for inmates.

TIMELINE – FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE

DOMESTIC POLITICS

- 1707 England and Scotland unite to form the Kingdom of Great Britain.
1714 George I, first Hanoverian King, appointed by parliament; Robert Walpole first Prime Minister.
1727-1760 Reign of George II — Parliament controlled by Whig party.
1760-1820 Reign of George III — King sought to control Parliament, favored Tory party.
1757 William Pitt the Elder, becomes Secretary of State, later Prime Minister of England.
1782 William Pitt the Younger becomes Prime Minister of England.
1798 Serious rebellion in Ireland is put down by Britain; Irish parliament dissolved.

WARS AND CONFLICTS

- 1715 Old Pretender incites the First Jacobite Rebellion in Scotland.
1739-48 War of the Austrian Succession—Britain allies with Austria to fight France.
1745 Young Pretender incites the Second Jacobite Rebellion in Scotland.
1756-63 Seven Year's War in Europe, a.k.a. French Indian Wars in America, Carnatic Wars in India
1757 Clive's victory at Plassey, wins Bengal in India for Britain.
1759 Wolfe's capture of Quebec, wins French Canada for Britain.
1759 Hawke's victory at Qiberon Bay, destroys French Sea Power.
1776-83 American Revolutionary War begins when American colonists Declare their Independence.
1777 France allies with the colonies against Britain following the Battle of Saratoga.
1781 General Cornwallis surrenders at Yorktown, the last battle of the Revolutionary war.
1792-1802 French Revolutionary Wars; France gains territory in Europe but loses control of colonies.
1797 Battles of St. Vincent and Camperdown give Britain control of the sea.
1798 Battle of the Nile destroys Napoleon plans to takeover Egypt.
1801 Battle of Copenhagen destroys French naval power in the North Sea.
1802-14 Napoleonic Wars drag all of Europe into turmoil.
1805 A naval victory at Trafalgar under Horatio Nelson destroys French naval power.
1808 Peninsular War begins in Spain—Duke of Wellington helps drive the French out of Spain.
1814 Wellington and Marshal Blucher defeat Napoleon at Waterloo.

EXPLORATION AND DISCOVERY

- 1764 James Hargreaves invents the Spinning Jenny.
1771 Captain Cook discovers Australia, New Zealand.
1784 James Watt invents the Steam Engine—ushers in the industrial revolution.

ARTS AND CULTURE

- 1755 Samuel Johnson publishes Dictionary of English Language.
1776 Adam Smith publishes The Wealth of Nations, revolutionizes ideas about commerce, taxes, and economics.

RECOMMENDED READING – FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE

CORE READING ASSIGNMENTS*

Haaren - Famous Men of Modern Times William Pitt to Horatio Nelson (2)
Harding - The Story of England The First Hanoverian Kings to England and the French Revolution (5)
Gaskoin - The Hanoverians The Coming of the Georges to Waterloo (14)

SUPPLEMENTAL RECOMMENDATIONS

Sellar - The Story of Nelson entire book
Lang - Stories from Gulliver's Travels entire book
Synge - Struggle for Sea Power entire book
Wood - Boy's Book of Battles Plassey to Waterloo (6)
Marshall - Our Island Story Earl of Mar's Hunting Party to The Battle of Waterloo (9)
Church - English History Stories - III The '15 to Waterloo (9)
Morris - Historical Tales - English The Hunting of Braemar to Trafalgar and Death of Nelson (3)

ALSO RECOMMENDED

Synge - Great Englishmen Robert Clive to George Stephenson (5)
Synge - Great Englishwomen Angelica Kaufmann to Elizabeth Fry (3)
Fraser - Boys' Book of Sea Fights Commodore John Paul Jones to Lord Horatio Nelson (2)
Marshall - English Literature Swift—"Journal to Stella" to Scott—"Wizard of the North" (16)

* Level I and II Study Questions are based on Core Reading Assignments.